BUILDER PHILOSOPHY

Rex Brown considers the long-term, comparing home building to relationships: What is the very best outcome? Will it stand the test of time? Rex knows that a fine custom home is realized with effort and cooperation, and he resolves to build long-term relationships based on hard work and honesty. He carefully considers how each decision affects the home's long-term value. "Working together while considering the long-term in every decision," is Rex Brown's philosophy for building homes and relationships.

BUILDER APPROACH TO HOME-A-RAMA

Rex Brown's approach is simple: Show the marketplace the most powerful custom home possible while expressing his personal talent with the assistance from his exceptional vendors. Throughout 2005, Rex researched the luxury-home market—and after reviewing many home plans, the timeless old-Europe theme stood out as the best choice. This home has allowed Rex to explore custom-home ideas while integrating timeless decorating into the home's construction. The result is a home that shows what Rex Brown and his vendors can do for today's custom-home market.

DESIGNER PHILOSOPHY

As it is, and always will be, the client comes first. Being service oriented, the client is first and foremost. I talk with the client from the first conception of their home before house plans or remodeling plans come into play. Listening to what the client is telling me, I help them find their style. I have been a veteran designer in residential and commercial for over 28 years with a strong art background. I enjoy seeing the client's vision of their home come to life. When everything comes together is the best result for me.

DESIGNER APPROACH TO HOME-A-RAMA

The Pinery Home by Rex Brown has been the most pleasing home I've done since designing homes for Home-A-Rama in 1993. This home is the premier French Provencal home, from the architectural detail in the elaborate trim work to the country-French cabinetry found throughout the house. All the right design concepts have gone into this home. This is one of the finest Goldberg-designed homes, and what I have done is put together the visions of the architect, the builder and myself to bring this home to life.
